WASHINGTON -- Menachem Begin's remarkable political career spanned more than five decades. It carried him from beginnings in a militant Zionist youth group in Po-land to the prime ministership of Israel and a role as shaper of the future of the Middle East.

Throughout the turbulent years in between, Mr. Begin was a relatively unknown figure, lost amoog better-known names such as David Ben-Gurion and Golda Meir. Even at the end of his career, be appeared something of an anomaly: a small, bespectacled man being glorified by his supporters as king of the Jews. Yet it was a deeply rooted harking back to the glories of ancient Israel that had made Mr. Begin's brand of nationalism so at-that catapulted him to power. Until Israel's Labor Party ran out of political miracles in 1977, Mr. Begin was always on the outside looking in - as a dissident from the mainstream of the Zionist movement, as a militant underground fighter against British rule in Palestine in the late 1940s and, for three decades, as leader of the opposition in largel's parliament, the Knesset.

Within months of moving into the prime minister's office, Mr. Begin presided over an event that none of his predecessors had managed, the arrival of the leader of a major Arab state in Jerusalem.

WASHINGTON — Economic development in the Third World läst year took its sharpest plunge since World War II, as exports fell, development projects were aban-doned and debt rescheduling cootinued to climb, according to the World Bank's annual report.

Nearly as many nonindustrial-ized countries had to reschedule their commercial debt in the last two years as in the previous 25 years, the bank said. "Performance varied considerably in the developing world," the report said, "but most countries experienced lower growth rates compared with those in the 1970s while some suffered absolute decline in gross domestic product." Growth in the industrial countries, which dropped by 0.2 percent last year, should become positive this year, the report continued, "which should increase the demand for developing countries' exports."

said the report on the bank's financial year, which ended June 30.

One of the major factors affecting the nonindustrialized countries was that many countries did not start projects because they did not have the necessary financing to match World Bank loans and they could not finish projects already started, said Munir P. Benjenk, a bank vice president for external re-

"Even the most optimistic scenario for short-term economic developments holds forth the promise that the next few years will be both difficult and painful," said the report. Mr. Benjenk and other World Bank officials said that another major problem the bank faces is a withdrawal of loans to Third World countries by commercial banks, an issue expected to be discussed at the upcoming joint annual meeting of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund.

In response to this problem, the bank started new co-financing in-struments that would allow the bank to participate in financing from commercial institutions in addition to making direct loans for particular projects. The bank also started a special assistance program under which disbursements for existing commitments would be accelerated by about $2 billion over the two-year life of the program and technical assistance would be increased.

BONN - A major split is developing in West Germany's peace movement between those seeking to enlist broad public sympathy through nonviolent tactics and those whn believe that more aggressive action is necessary to block the basing of new nuclear missiles later this year.

This growing schism worries West German authorities, who suspect that the pacifist wing may become discredited once Pershing-2 missiles are deployed this December, if the Geneva arms talks fail. It is widely feared that the anti-missile crusade could turn, in its frustration, toward more violent assaults on military

Until now, the anti-missile campaign has emphasized benign forms of protest like sit-ins and rallies. This strategy held that if police tried to bully crowds, a sense of moral outrage would sweep the country and mobilize the kind of mass support that can dictate a change in policy if not government.

But two weeks ago, in what was billed as the first test in a "hot autumn" of protests, a three-day blockade of the Mutlangen U.S. Army base fizzled when the authorities simply haited traffic and let the demonstrators bask in their passivity. In a series of postmortems since the ineffectual blockade, several leaders in the movment have started clamoring for a new "strategy of escalation," including strikes, occupation of military bases and possible acts of sabotage.

More forceful tactics by the peace movement, argues Lukas Beckmann, general manager of the Greens party, would still exclude any violence against people but not "the damaging of material objects."
Another Greens leader, Rainer Trampert, warned

last week that the movement was in danger of being "blunted" by devotion to law and order and said it had to display a new "quality of resistance" through more Mutlangen showed that the police are only nice to us if we are particularly harmless," he said.

As the likelihood grows that Pershing-2 missiles will be deployed despite a wave of anti-missile rallies expected next month, the current factional dispute over tactics could evolve into a deeper division between nonviolent activists and those who feel that any means are acceptable in halting nuclear weapons.

After the Soviet Union shot down a Korean airliner two weeks ago, some U.S. officials proposed delaying resumption of the Geneva arms control negotiations on both intermediate-range and strategic nuclear weapons

Instead, President Ronald Reagan chose to resume discussions but make no basic change in the U.S. position, which now calls for eventual destruction of all intermediate-range missiles, but in the interim permits the United States to have a number of such weapons equal to the total maintained by the Larry M. Speakes, the White House spokesman, said Tuesday that the administration would "continue an active pursuit at Geoeva of arms reductions" and added that the U.S. delegation has "an amount of flexibility to listen to any serious Soviet proposals."

The administration has been studying one interagency proposal that would set up geographical sub-limits for intermediate-range missiles. It would have the Russians freeze their missiles in the Far East at the current level of 108, and allow the number of U.S. missiles in Europe to equal the Soviet total west of the Ural Mountains.

U.S. Criticizes Cleanup At Nuclear Power Plant

By Philip M. Boffey New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - Investigators for the Nnclear Regulatory Commission have charged that the companies involved in cleaning up the damaged Three Mile Island nuclear reactor have been circumventing proper procedures and adoptiog cleanup techniques of questionable safety.

The investigators also said Tuesday that the regulatory commis-sion's own staff members in charge of monitoring the cleanup had stood by as procedural and managerial difficulties mounted and made no effort to intervene in what they considered "internal conflicts" within the two companies

The companies are GPU Nuclear Corp., a subsidiary of General Public Utilities Corp., which owns the reactor near Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and Bechtel North American Power Corp., which has been hired by GPU to conduct the cleanup.

GPU Nuclear, which has overall charge of the reactor and its cleanup, said that the unprecedented circumstances caused by the 1979 accident were "difficult to deal with" under oormal procedures and that it was taking steps to improve those procedures. It also stressed that there is no evidence of a safety hazard at the site. The findings issued Tuesday represent a major initial victory for dissident engineers who had participated in the cleanup program but then "blew the whistle" on what they regarded as dangerous and improper shortcuts.

Women's Groups Criticize Reagan Reported in J. At House Hearing on Equal Rights seneral elections at the Reput

By Eleanor Randolph

Los Angeles Times Service WASHINGTON - As Congress faced a second round of de-bate on the proposed Equal Rights Amendment, representatives of women's groups attacked President Ronald Reagan's "alternative" ap-proach to wiping out discrimina-tory state and federal laws.

At a hearing Wednesday by a Representative Patricia Samueland a Colorado Democrat who had suched for the hearings, told the subcommittee she agreed with a colleague who compared Mr. Reagen's law-by-law approach to "Abraham Lincoln doing the Emancipation Proclamation plan-tation by plantation."

Others argued that a change in the U.S. Constitution would have more impact than pressure on different levels of government.
"If the 19th Amendment Igiving women voting rights had not been passed, there would be women in Mississippi now who would never have had the right to vote," said Polly Madenwald, president of the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, referring to the fact that Mississip-pi never ratified the 19th Amendment, which went into effect in

The ERA failed in June 1982 because only 35 of the necessary 38 states ratified it, but it was reintroduced in both houses of Congress in January.

Recent polls have shown that fewer women support the Reagan administration than men, partly because of the administration's opposition to the ERA. Political experts have suggested that this time around more Republicans might support the amendment. Mr. Reagan has said the amend-

Article on Rape Draws Criticism

WASHINGTON - Representative Patricia Schroeder, a Colorado Democrat, sharply criticized a book review by Aram Bakshian Jr., Presiden Ronald Reagan's former chief speechwriter, which suggests that rape is "a cherished fantasy" for many women. "This is bizarre, pathetic drivel," Ms. Schroeder said Wednesday, "No one would pay it the slightest attention ex-cept that Mr. Bakshian was, until a few days ago, Mr. Reagan's chief speechwriter."

Mr. Bakshian, reviewing Helen Hazen's book "Endless Rapture: Rape, Romance and the Female Imagination," in the National Review, commented: "Rape, especially, seems to strike a deep instinctive chord in millions of female readers, a cherished fantasy that is not confined to air-headed bits of fluff or frustrated dowds." In a telephone interview Thursday, Mr. Bakshian, who recently resigned his White House job, said his remark was taken out of context.

al laws that deprive women of equal opportunities in jobs, salaation and other benefits. But Mr. Reagan's program was described recently as a "sham" by Barbara Honegger, a Justice De-partment consultant on discrimination against women, who resigned. The hearing Wednesday was the White House personnel director, John S. Herrington, said Mr. Reagan has hired 381 women for part-time positions, compared with 437 by Mr. Carter.

But, he added, excluding 76 women named by Mr. Carter to two commissions that are now defunct, the International Women's Year Commission and the National Advisory Committee on Women, 6 percent more part-time appointments have been made by Mr. Reagan than by Mr. Carter in hisfirst two years in office.

Overall, Mr. Herrington said, omitting judges and members of the two commissions, the number of Mr. Reagan's direct presidential appointments is 7 percent greater than those of Mr. Carter (375 to 351) over a comparable period.

The union leader, Rodolfo Seguel, head of the National Copper Workers' Confederation, is among the most outspoken critics of the government. Reagan Calls Cuban Pact 'Abrogated'

By Francis X. Clines New York Times Service

WASHINGTON - President Ronald Reagan has contended that the Soviet Union and Cuba have repeatedly violated the 1962 agreement that ended the Cuban missile crisis by continuing to ship offensive weapons into the American

"As far as I'm concerned, that agreement has been ahrogated many times by the Soviet Union and Cuba in the hringing in of what can only be considered offensive weapons, not defensive, there," Mr. Reagan told reporters Wednesday.

The White House spokesman, Larry M. Speakes, said later that the president was referring to violations of the "spirit of the agree-ment," which had essentially focused on nuclear weapons. Mr. Speakes did not cite specific cases of violation, but emphasized that the United States had no plans to abrogate its half of the agreement, which was not to invade Cuba.

Mr. Reagan outlined his interpretation of the agreement, which was never made in writing by President John F. Kennedy and Soviet Prime Minister Nikita S. Khrushehev or their representatives, in response to a question about Soviet-Cuban activity in the hemi-

Washington Post Service WASHINGTON - The United States has not changed its position that a political settlement for South-West Africa, the territory which is also known as Namibia and is ruled by South Africa despite Western diplomatic efforts to bring it to independence, must be linked to the withdrawal of Cuban troops from neighboring Angola, U.S. officials said.

The officials responded Wednesday to remarks by Prime Minister Robert Mugabe of Zimbabwe, as be wound up his first official visit tere after talks with President Ronald Reagan and with members of the House Foreign Affairs Committee and the State Department.

Mr. Mugabe said that he was surprised that Mr. Reagan had linked a settlement in Namibia with the withdrawal of an estimated 25,000 Cuban troops from Angola. But he also said that the U.S. position seemed to have changed. "When I came, I had concluded that the United States had allowed this matter, as it were, to die off," Mr. Mugabe said. "But it appears it's still alive, and South Africa, as President Reagan says, is insisting that that condition be fulfilled before everything else is undertaken.

"Bnt," he said, "there was a modification which appears new, that perhaps a firm commitment by Angola on the question might suffice rather than the actual with-

U.S. officials insisted, however, the American position on Namihia remains that there must be "parallel movement" involving South African withdrawal from the territory and Cuban withdrawal from Angola. "If a commitment from the Angolans were acceptable to both sides," one official said, "who are we to say no? This does not represent a change in our position.

A South African official said his country would agree to go forward with a Namibian settlement if there is a firm agreement with Angola and if there is reason to believe it will be carried out."

Once the peace with Egypt had been cemented, however, a task that took months, Mr. Begin was embroiled in contimuing international controversy - over the future of the West Bank, or Judea and Samaria as he called it, and over Israel's troubled northem border with Lebanon.

While it is the West Bank that over time is certain to figure most heavily in the future of the dideast, it was Lebanon that proved the most hopes of revitalizing the economy. Israel continued to be torn by high inflation throughout his government and made little progress in integrating the growing segment of the population from less-advanced Middle Eastern countries into what was increasingly a technologically oriented economy.

The economy was not Mr. Begin's strong suit. He was a man molded by and interested in history, and just as the flow of history gave him a prominent role in Arab-Israeli affairs, so, too, had the passage of time played a role in his coming to office.

Not only had Labor Party leaders grown grounds to Europe giving way to those from Middle Eastern countries. Politically, the new-A commission of inquiry, initially fought by Simply put, he followed the teachings of the militant Zionist, Vladimir Jabotinsky, who believed that every Jew had a right to enter Palestine, that Jews must take the initiative against Arabs to deter their attacks, and that Jewish armed force alone, not collaboration with the British, would bring about the desired Jewish homeland in all of Palestine.

Mr. Begin absorbed these principles during his upbringing in Poland and they remained with him throughout his political life, transformed to meet changing historical circumstance, but never abandoned.

There were other political and personal traits that can be traced to these crucial years of his Tempered by the conspiratorial nature of Jewish politics in late 19th and early 20th century Eastern Europe, Mr. Begin early on displayed a fierce determination to stand fast behind what he believed to be right. Mr. Begin's West Bank policy was met with growing restiveness by the Arab population, which, in turn, led to clashes with settlers, security forces or both.

Up to the Lebanese

Keeping Lebanon stitched together is a desirable American diplomatic objective but it is not a vital national interest. If that distinction can be preserved. President Reagan's show of aerial force may help to protect the marines there without incurring foolish new military commitments. If Congress endorses their deployment without pushing the president in exaggerate the stakes, it can hold him to account and also assist his diplomacy.

Mr. Reagan was right in speak of a civil war, but by emphasizing Syria's involvement and the Soviet link in Syria his aides theaten a dangerous escalation. Outsiders have preyed on Lebanon for a decade, as they prey on any convulsed society. It is nonetheless a civil war among sectarian militias that have fought for 25 years and incurred many a blood debt.

No American interest would justify intervention at this point. But the United States accidentally finds itself able, perhaps, in help the Lebanese coexist again under one flag. The marines and other Western "peacekeeping" troops add a small weight in the side of Maro-nite Christians, who hold Lebanon's presidency. The Syrians and Palestmians add weight in Moslem factions that President Gemayel carelessly drove into alliance against him.

Moslem and Christian Lebanese say they prefer accommodation to partitioning the country. It is therefore desirable, and humane, for the marines to stay long enough to see whether both sides mean it. If they do not mean it, there is no point spilling more American blood in avert partition. Anyone who cares enough about Lebanon to read its history will learn that it was a precarious creation to begin with and that the urge to pull it apart did not come from Damascus or Moscow.

When the Israelis wisely moved out of the cross fire last month, President Gemayel lacked the strength to fill tha void. He now has to compensate by offering Moslem groups more power in his regime. The marines can provide a shield while he makes a sincere effort. If he doesn't, or if agreement appears impossible, they should leave.

That is why Congress, in properly asserting its duty under the War Powers Resolution, should set no arbitrary deadline for American withdrawal. Nor should it deny the marines the benefit of aerial cover to discourage the shelling of their positions.

But Congress can insist that President Reagan keep the marines out of ground combat and define their mission as essentially diplomatic. If the United States is to play Lebanese chess, it has to learn in distinguish between a weak pawn and a checkmate.

Money on the Move

Since the dollar's foreign exchange rate is too high in relation to the things that a dollar buys, why doesn't the government bring it down? In the old days — which means until the early 1970s - a government told its currency where in stand in the exchange markets and, with occasional interesting exceptions, it obediently stood there. Currently, governments might just as well save their breath.

In late July and early August the United States spent a quarter of a billion dollars buying West German marks and Japanese yen to hold their exchange rates up and the dollar's down. That operation may have broken a speculative rise in the dollar, but the results have not been dramatic. Why do governments suddenly seem to have so little control over the values of their currencies?

The New York Federal Reserve Bank recently published the results of a survey, taken last April, showing that about $33.5 billion a day was moving through the U.S. foreign exchange markets - dollars being changed into -foreign currencies and vice versa. That was an increase of 43 percent over the volume in a previous survey in March 1980. The 1980 survey in turn showed that the volume then was five times as high as it had been only three years earlier. The flows through foreign exchange markets around the world have risen with enormous speed and are now far beyond the capacity of any government to manage. Governments are able in generate blips in the market to make life dangerous for speculators; that is what the United States was doing in midsummer. But they no longer have the resources to maintain constant exchange rates.

The basic reason for the extraordinary growth in foreign exchange flows has been the expansion of international trade. But the machinery that serves trade also enables a great tide of private and public money to move restlessly around the world, running away from political instability, seeking higher interest rates and playing the market. After World War II the world had a relatively stable and predictable system of fixed ex-change rates based on the American dollar, But that system collapsed in 1973 under other countries' rising economic weight, and now the major currencies float, with their exchange values shifting constantly with the ups and downs of the market. Floating turns out to impose costs and perils unforeseen 10 years ago, but at present nobody seems to be able to come up with a practical alternative. The world's trading nations have outgrown the previous regime without finding their way to any other that promises stability. Meanwhile the amount of money moving daily through the exchange markets continues to grow.

KAL 007: About the Reactions

In civilized countries, straying off course is not recognized as a capital crime, worth penalty by death. We recall what the Soviet UN 1973 Libyan airliner incident. It called [the shooting down of the airliner by Israel] a "criminal act of international terrorism." Us-ing such words as "barbaric" and "criminal," it asserted at that time that the perpetrator should be strongly coodemned.

We cannot help but deplore the brazen absurdity of Moscow. The words that Moscow has let out on the incident are an insult in the intelligence and conscience of mankind. There certainly is a limit, the trespassing of which is not allowed in human conscience.

The Soviet implication with regard to their border is that if anyone strays across it, they are ready to shoot him down again. There is no weight given to human values. We demand that the Soviets do away with such inhuman conduct and brazen falsehood by honestly admitting their guilt and offering a sincere apology for their crime against humanity.

- The Korea Herald (Seoul).

News journals the world over have been recording, in emotive language, the waves of condemnation that continue to wash up against the stone walls of the Soviet Union in the aftermath of the destruction of Korean Air Lines flight 007. The global outrage, however, has done nothing more than emphasize the true impotence of world opinion in the impassive face of Soviet intractability.

President Reagan has successfully expanded condemnation to encompass the whole of the free world, not just the United States. But the result? A few weeks' restriction on the operations of Aeroflot. The Soviets must feel this as just another slap on the wrist.

They would be wrong. For, ultimately, the balance of world opinion is much more than a matter of reprisals and counter-measures. For all of the Soviets' hasilisk immunity to sanctions and deafness to protest, they must realize that they have dealt themselves a deathblow in the eyes of the world. No longer can they ever lay claim to credibility in their preaching for global peace; no longer will their deriding of the United States as the true warmongers ever hold any water; no longer will their self-righteousness cut any ice amongst the people of the world who, despite their material ineffectuality, can never be denied the right to feel and to hold opinions. Those feelngs and opinions are now overwhelmingly, damningly against the Soviet Union.

By blocking a joint condemnation of the Soviet Union for shooting down a South Korean passenger aircraft on Sept. 1, Greece has not only stirred up the justified anger of the other nine members of the European Community. It has also raised the question of what the Community is about and, more explicitly, how much hope there really is for European political cooperation, the diplomats' code phrase for a kind of infant community foreign policy. Mr. Papandreou sees the Common Market primarily as a means in transfer wealth from the European north to the south, more specifically Greece. His political vision for Europe is that of a region independent of great military power blocks. It is a formula that, as in the instance of the airliner, forces him to be more tender to Moscow than his partners would like. It also is a formula hard in reconcile with the renewal of the agreement that allows the United States to maintain military bases in Greece. Then, the art of playing both ends

1908: Anti-Trust Law Criticized

NEW YORK — Mr. E.H. Harriman made a plea for the modification of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law as now applied to railroads. Con-cerning plans for the further development of railroad interests, he said. "The most important thing today is to bring the people to understand that the Sherman Act must be made to cover only such purposes as were designed by its maker. The act is now being made to hinder railroads in the legitimate development of what the people desire in the extension of railroad facilities." He said that everything looked well. He paid bttle attention to politics, but found all through the West a feeling of indifference amounting in apathy.

RC-135 + KAL 007 = Some Questions

DENVER — A major effort seems to have been made to bewilder the American public concerning the capabilities of the U.S. Air Force RC-135 and, more importantly, tha National Security Agency. As former crew members on an RC-135, we find official statements concerning the extent of that plane's involvement before and after the downing of Korean Air Lines flight 007 incompatible with our experience. Official U.S. sources have tried to minimize the capability of the RC-135 by alleging that its mission off the coast of the Soviet Union was for the purpose of "verifying compliance with arms control agreements." Other sources have portrayed the RC-135 as a passive listening device. President Reagan stated that the aircraft was back at its base in Alaska for a full hour prior to the Soviet attack on the airliner, implying that no RC-135s were then in the vicinity.

The RC-135 is a Strategic Air Command (SAC) long-range reconnaissance aircraft that carries an electronic and communications intercept platform. It is flown by a SAC crew, but the intercept platform is manned by some 30 U.S. Air Force Security Service personnel. In addition there are several electronic warfare officers assigned to the platform. All person-nel aboard the RC-135 are under the operational authority of the National

The RC-135 has the ability to stay aloft for missions of 18 to 20 hours, demanding but a single midair refueling within that period. The aircraft are assigned "orbit" areas near target nations by the NSA. The "orbit" is a flight path resembling a figure eight.

The NSA on occasion adjusts the orbits of RC-135s so that they will intentionally penetrate the airspace of a target nation. This is ordered to bring a target country's air defense systems into a state of alert so that the NSA can analyze the activated systems for potential flaws. The RC-135 is a primary intercept platform for the NSA, meaning that it is a prime receptor of signals emanating from a surveillance target. It also performs functions that simply cannot be accomplished by satellite or ground listening stations.

The aircraft is deemed so important to U.S. intelligence collection in sensitive areas that it is always re-lieved on its orbit by another RC-135 just before the end of its mission. This procedure allows for 24-hour-aday, 365-day-a-year intercept cover-age. We find President Reagan's indication that the Sakhalin-Kamchatka area was abandoned by the RC-135 intercept platform to be unbelievable and contrary to NSA policy. At this point we shall disclose several, certainly oot all, of the capabilities of the RC-135. These might have been of particular value to the KAL 747 as it moved toward and eventually through Soviet airspace. Several of these capabilities are of-fensive in nature; this cootradicts sources who have referred to the RC-135 as a "passive listening device." These offensive capabilities are under the exclusive control of an agency, the NSA, which operates unchecked by America's elected representatives.

The RC-135 has a super-advanced, ultra-secure communications system which is linked to the most so cated communications network in the world. This system, sometimes referred to as "backchannel," permits the instantaneous reporting of realtime, tactical intelligence to the highest levels of the U.S. government, including the president, from any location in the world. A message intended for the president is designated as a "CRITIC" and is required to be in the president's hands no more than 10 minutes after the time of transmissinn from, for instance, an RC-135 orbiting over the Sea of Japan. This is but a single capability of the

-135's communications system. It also has the capability of transmitting messages over an extremely broad range of radio frequencies, including those used by other aircraft, both civilian and military, ships, ground stations and air controllers. During the Vietnam War, crew members aboard RC-135s transmitted real-time warnings to U.S. pilots over North Vietnam warning them that they were being tracked by hostile radar. In some cases the warnings permitted U.S. pilots to evade mis-from either the ground or the air. Equipment manned by SAC elec-tronie warfare officers can be used to jam" radar and radio transmissions in addition in certain electronic sys-tems in other aircraft. This capability was used in Vietnam against Sovietsupplied radars and aircraft.

Fantasies After the Offense

By Leopold Unger

BRUSSELS — General Vladimir Govorov, who apparently gave the order to shoot down the South Korean airliner, was just doing his duty. And the Sukhoi pilot who fired the missile was just following orders. So were they all, political or military authorities, whose task it is to defend Soviet borders against enemies, saboteurs and spies sent by Washington, 269 of whom were aboard that airliner. Such is the extraordinary public line that Moscow peddles. But there is also the unofficial line, offered in softer official tones in conversations with Western politicians and journalists. This "private" line has already turned up in some Western publications.

It has two parts.

Firstly, the crime over Sakhalin was not the impetuous reaction of a mad or overtired general. The Soviet military's electronic communications system assures permanent communi-cation with Moscow, the heart of the centralized Soviet military system,

Yuri Andropov was not informed of the South Korean jet's violation of the Soviet frontier. This pleasant man who loves Western music could obviously not have been the one to order the cold-blooded murder of 269 innocent persons. The shooting was ordered by military men who are not bothered by Mr. Andropov's upper-most concern for Soviet respectability on the international scene. Thus, a West German newspaper wonders editorially if "the Soviet missile was not really aimed at a Soviet target" — whether this was not "a move by the Soviet military complex to torpedo the Geneva talks and possible agreement on the basis of Mr. Andropov's proposals to destroy a number of SS-20 missiles.

London newspapers ask in print whether Mr. Andropov is still "in full control of the military." And a French newspaper cites Victor Louis, the KGB messenger to the West, say-ing that the decision to shoot "was made on the spot and immediately" before contacting Moscow.

Those who defend the good Mr. Andropov have to admit sadly that the Soviet military establishment is so powerful that the head of state and party cannot disavow his generals.

All this recalls the line Stalin used to give Roosevelt - who believed him - about having to take Soviet public opinion into account. Leonid Brezhnev once broke off a discussion with Henry Kissinger ostensibly to confer with his "military advisers" waiting in another room.

The point of such playacting is to gain concessions from the West:
Good civilians offer conditions that the bad military might try to withdraw. Moscow often profits from this ploy. It is trying again.

Indeed, didn't the West accept this way of thinking at Yalta when it transferred 150 million Europeans into the Soviet camp?

The West stood by indifferent to the massacre of civilians in Hungary during the 1956 uprising, to the invasion of Czechoslovakia in 1968 and in the crushing of Poland's hope of liberalization in 1981, given the Krem-lin's right to defend itself beyond its frontiers and beyond any real threat. The clear implication is that the West must now accept that the Kremlin has to defend itself over Sakhalin: There are spies everywhere, this line goes on. The South Korean jet

Regarding "Law Experts Say Na-tions May Shoot Down Intruders in Peacetime Only in Rare Cases" (IHT, Sept. 3) by David Margolick:

The article implies that the Soviets may have had a case in shooting down a civilian passenger plane, if it were engaged in aerial espionage. With all respect to the author, I beg to differ. Ever since the signing of the 1972 SALT agreements, the Soviet Union (as well as the United States) has imdertaken not only to tolerate recomnissance operations of the other side, including those conducted from the sky, but even to refrain from interfering with such operations. Shooting down a satellite would certainly be a casus belli. Why then treat an aircraft differently? his celebrated stage production and, finally, Bizer's "Carmen," which is being completed near Seville with the Italian Francesco Rosi as director and the American Lorin Mazzel as conductor .

Rosi's "Carmen" stars a new American singer, Julia Migenes Johnson, in the title role, Placido Domingo as Don Jose and Ruggero Raimondi as Escamillo. It is produced by Gaumont, which also produced the Joseph Losey "Don Giovanni," and the score and libretto have been treated with great respect. Too much respect, Rosi sometimes thinks.

It is a lyric opera written 100 years ago for "the theater with exigencies created by the fashions of the time," Rosi says. He is tall, always elegant in Rome-made British clothes, with tinted glasses and a flat, compact face that breaks into sudden smiles.

One of the fashions of 1875 that irritates him is the repetition of successful airs. "To repeat a song two or three times simply because the star wanted it!" he said in the lobby of a cool parador before going on to night-time shooting that would last until 6 A.M. "The repetitions mean I must find a way of photographing the same music differently." He signed. That night the toreador would arrive at the tavern of Lillas Pastia and sing his celebrated song. Twice. "- "I wouldn't want the audience to notice it but I do want people to know I have suffered," Rosi confides. "Carmen" is, at $6.5 million, the most expensive film Gaumont has produced and it won't be amortized for 10 years, says its producer, Patrice Ledoux. This is one reason for the film's extreme fidelity to the score. "If we were to make cuts or changes, it wouldn't be Bizet and it would risk being quickly outmoded," says Ledoux, who has produced 47 operas for French television. But while Losey had to direct 'Don Giovanni" with a pre-recorded score on which he had not been consulted. Rosi had already plotted every scene and was able to give Maazel notes on tempi before and during the recording.

"I don't forget that I am doing an opera on film," Rosi says. "But I also don't forget that I'm doing a film."

Francesco Rosi.

The problem is that film rhythm and opera rhythm are so different. "I must make an image, a true image that fits the music, that will strike the spectator as the only possible image," Rosi says. "Opera on film is really quite new - no one knows for sure what it is."

Rosi, whose previous films include "Salvatore Giuliano," "Christ Stopped at Eboli" and Three Brothers," is a realist director with a gift of intimacy whose films are sometimes falsely described as documentaries. Realism, he says, means respect: "It is telling the history and real conditions of a country without falsifying, it is accentuating the typical but respect-ing authentic differences." He took on "Carmen" because he had been thinking of doing a musical and couldn't resist the challenge.

"If a producer provokes a director, then the director feels challenged and it's rare not to accept a challenge," he says. "'Carmen' is a realistic opera. I think it's possible to do with it what can't be done with others. After two years of working on it, I do think it's against nature to make filmed opera," he adds. "But I am amusing myself with the attempt. I have never worked so hard."

Gaumont chose Rosi because he knows Spain so well - he speaks Spanish perfectly and made a fine film on bullfighting. The Moment of Truth," in Spain in 1965 - and because of his feeling for natural settings. The look of the film is inspired by Gustave Dort's Spanish drawings; it has been shot entirely on location in the towns of Ronda and Carmona in Andalusia with not one inch of film shot in a

"It's a permanent catastrophe," Patrice Lodoux said, "otherwise it's been just fine. To make a period film in natural settings is sheer madness, and very beautiful." Just to film a street scene in Ronda that required de-modernizing some facades, Ledoux had to negotiate 247 separate contracts with 247 families. Domingo and Raimondi were natural choices, though filming hasn't been easy for either one. "They've learned to fight, ride, climb real rocks, get slim," Rosi said. The boldest stroke, and one that looks like a winner, was to cast an almost-unknown soprano of Greek and Puerto Rican descent, Julia Migenes Johnson, as Carmen.

Johnson made her debut at 31/2 in New York in "Madame Butterfly" and went on to sing "Dites Moi" in "South Pacific" and to play Maria in a revival of "West Side Story" and the original Hodel in "Fiddler on the Roof," She took over for Teresa Stratas in "Lulu" at the Met and will sing the role at the Vienna State Opera in October. She came to the attention of Gaumont through Maurice Bejart, who had cast her as Salome after having waited, he said, for someone like her for 20 years. She was signed for "Carmen" although she is a soprano; long coaching brought her into mezzo

"I worked for a year to find the notes," she said in a village house in Carmona that had been made into dressing rooms. She is 5 foot 2 and freekled and retains a sturdy New York

"She is fantastic, a Carmen full of sensuality and natural acting — the way she dances, the way she moves, "Placido Domingo says. "She's a lightweight Carmen, which I like, not a natural mezzo, very feminine."

"Julia can captivate a man by the charm of her personality, not just her body," Rosi says. "Carmen is an outsider, a Gypsy not a Spaniard. She's no tart. She loves her liberty, she is aware of her own dignity, she doesn't die accepting fate. She fights not to die but when she sees that in order not to die she must live lies and deceit, she prefers to die."

"She dies for her independence, she will not give in," Julia Migenes Johnson says. "She's got a bad temper, very ego. She's like women's lib, you know."

if there is agreement on Carmen, Lorin Maazel has put in a sour note hy calling Don Jose a blundering bumpkin. No one agrees. Mazzel should read "Carmen," again, Domingo says. "The trouble with Don José is he is too bourgeois." He has sung the role 150 times in 20 productions.

"Don José is middle class, almost village aristocracy," Rosi agrees. "He doesn't have Carmen's freedom, he's a man with all the weaknesses of a man who falls in love and is limited by the moral structure he was raised in. All men are fnois. The important thing is not to be a hero. I'd rather be a fnol than a hero."

The librettists of "Carmen" were taking chances in creating an amoral heroine and a murderer hero. For safety's sake, they put in a good girl, Micaela (played by Faith Esham), who did not exist in Merimee's original tale. Rosi has had no problem in bringing so conventional a character to life.

"She's a woman in love who's fighting for her love. She has the courage to go into a smugglers' hideaway to get her man. That's a hint on how to make her live." "Carmen," Rosi says, is about living people.

"it's a real story but told in French and set in Spain with people who sing instead of speak. My aim is to make it accepted as natural." Rosi is a Neapolitan whose uncle led the claque at the Naples opera. "Being Neapolitan helped me to understand Andalusians," he said. "Neapolitans are like Andalusians and Andalusians are like Neapolitans." His films,

Julia Migenes Johnson and Placido Domingo.

he says, are always about the south. His next picture will be shot in South America and is based on his friend Gabriel Garcia Marquez's novella, "Chronicle of a Death Foretold." All his films, he says, are studies of society, including "Carmen."

"I want to make 'Carmen' live even if it is an opera and therefore a compromise between realism and fiction. I want to show the values, the social and cultural context.

But first he must shoot the scene of Escamillo's arrival in the tavern "I can't stand tavern scenes," he says. He is worrying about moving extras through the endless entrances and exits that opera requires. Before going to work, he gets out piles of still photographs of the production. They are marvelous, authentic and intensely moving. I can't wait to see the film, Rosi is told. "Nor can I," be says with a sigh. "It's directing it that gets me down."

IAMI — A French industrial chemist believes he bas figured out how, in about 2650 B.C., the Egyptians built the pyramids of Giza with only primitive tools: They poured synthetic stones. The method, he adds, is similar to pouring concrete today.

"We have now studied the stones from a chemical and a microscopic point of view and we have proof they are synthetic," Dr. Joseph Davidovits said in an interview with The Miami Herald. He added that a strand of hair gave him a clue to the puzzle that had baffled scholars for centuries.

He was quickly challenged, however, in Cairo, where the former director of the Egyptian antiquities commission said of Davidovits's theory: "It is against reason and logic."

Archaeologists have long wondered how a society without sophisticated machinery hauled millions of blocks of stone from pits that were miles away and then stacked them up to 40 stories high. Some have theorized that brute strength or pulleys were the key. Others have even credited extraterrestrial creatures

Davidovits said his tests on five small casing stones from the largest of the pyramids showed that they were composed of a limestone fossilwas bound together so well that it almost could not be distinguished from natural stone.

In addition to chemical and X-ray analysis, he said, proof of his theory lies in a strand of human hair, two and a half centimeters long (about an inch), found encased in one of the stones. He said he believed the hair fell into the mixture when the pyramid stone was being poured.

"We think the mixture was transported in baskers that weighed 20 or 30 pounds," Davidovits said. "It wasn't easy for the Egyptians, but they did not need 50,000 or 100,000 workers as is assumed. We speculate there were 1,500 workers on site."

Davidovits, 48, president of the Cordi com-pany in Saint-Quentin, France, is teaching at Barry University in Miami Shores, Florida, Last spring the Geopolymer Institute at Barry published "Alchemy and Pyramids," the first of his projected six-volume series, "The Book

He explained that his research showed that the Egyptians built their pyramids with four materials as techniques evolved: first, brick made of air-dried clay; then, limestone-powder hrick; next, synthetic stone poured on the spot and, finally, big beams of limestone poured in wooden molds. Of the big beams, which he dates to 2400 B.C., the industrial chemist added, "That's the same technique you use today to build bridges."

The five small easing stones that contributed to his research were given to him by Egyptologists, he said, and there is no question about their being genuine. Still, he is seeking his own samples. The best way to conduct our research now," he asserted, "is to go to the Great Pyramids and study at the site. But there's no question of our findings. They've been acclaimed at scientific conventions."

In Cairo, however, the former antiquities official, Gamal Mokhtar, said the theory was illogical "for a number of reasons, including the fact that Cairo is surrounded by many granite hills, so why should they use a complicated operation of manufacturing two and a half million stones, each weighing a ton?"
Mokhtar said he believed the pyramids were built of blocks cut from the granite hills.

"Finding a hair two and a half centimeters long is also illogical," Mokhtar added, "because the builders were not hippies with long hair. All drawings show they shaved their

Giving France the Hard Sell

EW YORK — Bloomingdale's Fête de France, launched this week in New York, was much more than the usual department store promotion —it was a triumph of merchan-dising intrigue. The concept of the show resembled the planning of Versailles, with Marvin Traub, the store's chairman, displaying the glories of France with Sun King panache.

This was the largest and most-expensive venture the store has had, including its periodic celebrations of the world's countries, and an encore for France, which alone has had two extravaganzas. The merchandise was worth $20 million, with a large chunk paid by the French government to encourage Bloomingdale's buying. "But after all," as Tranb puts it without shame, "Bloomingdale's will have between 12 and 14 million people throughout our 14 stores to see the French exhibit.

This is an enormous opportunity for the French."

The exhibition included all the classics — cuisine and couture, wines and perfumes, crystal, silver and home furnishings, and what looked like an awful lot of loaves of French bread peeking out of an awful lot of

But Traub, who says he has had a love affair with France ever since he landed on Omaha Beach in 1944, also wanted to give the affair a touch of class and make this a cultural event. So he came up with what many consider the outrageous idea of having Jack Lang, the French minister of culture, select, appoint and pay an attaché de mission to visit French museums. She was Claude Bourdier Neff, a consultant who works for major stores, including Seibu in Japan. "There is no way I could have gone around to those museums saying 'I'm from Bloomingdale's,' " she admits. "They would have sent me packing."

So, unknown to the French taxpayer, she was appointed March I and was able to cruise France, borrowing from eight major museums. The Beaubourg alone loaned giant sculptures and there were paintings by Gromaire, Miro and de Busset, sculptures by Cesar, Lalanne and Nikki de Saint Phalle, antique furniture from Provençal museums and a lot of Suggestions were discreetly passed on by Tranb, which reportedly enerated some friction at museum levels, where curators would have liked to have suggested a more-modern vision of France. But Tranh insisted on a traditional and reassuring image of France, with Provence. and other regions he personally loves, providing most of the local color. The result was that some people questioned whether this vison of France through Bloomingdale's eyes would not end up being too brashly commercial. Traub's answer was, "Of course it's commercial and it's also almost impossible for anybody, especially in France, to please everyone. I am sure there will be criticism of what we are doing — it would not be France if there weren't. But I think most French people who will come and who will have a chance to see the work we have done will be pleased and proud. We are not just selling merchandise, we are showing French art and culture." French officials also insisted on having some technology around, but there was not too much of it. In short, despite the clash in political ideology between France and the United States, husiness is husiness and came out a winner.

French officials, who started negotiating with Traub more than a year ago over lunch at Maxim's, took this well. Dressed by Dior for the occasion, Edith Cresson, the minister of commerce and tourism, flew over with 245 French industrialists, who were told to learn to do business, à l'Américaine. This baffled many of them, who had never been to the United States, but they decided the trip might result in their doing business with each other. Some French newspapers and magazines also went beserk promoting France and Bloomingdale's, with Figaro and Elle and at least two decoration magazines putting out special issues.

The time and energy involved were remarkable. Some 20 buyers made 255 trips to France to select and purchase merchandise from more than 700 suppliers. Five noted French decorators - Jacques Grange, Alberto Pinto. Andrée Putman, Jean Dive and Jeanne Ganber de Loche - were called on to decorate model rooms. Putman, who did a romantic terrace. had last-minute troubles: Two blue parrots escaped from their cage and she had a hard time finding 12 dead leaves in Central Park to spread

Four famous chefs will perform at one point or another in the store. Artcurial, a private art gallery, made its debut in America. The 89-yearold Jacques-Henri Lartigue had a wonderful retrospective of his photographs and the Normandy, the grandest cruise ship of the 1930s, also berthed at Bloomingdale's with a show of memorabilia and a new collection of reproductions of its Art Deco china, glass and silver. To launch the Fête de France in style, Traub invited 1,650 people to a 5200-champagne-and-black tie charity gala, the profits of which went to the Giverny Monet Museum, whose yellow kitchen was reproduced at Bloomingdale's. It was a truly thankful American crowd, with Mrs. Evan Galbraith, wife of the U.S. ambassador to France, saying a few words, and Philippine de Rothschild donating all the wine.

Some 700 people got to sit down, the others floated about, but as Traub, undaunted, had to admit. Trying to have 1,650 of your closest friends to dinner is not the easiest enterprise - even for Blooming-

A Medieval Treasure Re-emerges

by Souren Melikian

ONDON - The most extraordinary illuminated manuscript of the Middle Ages to be rediscovered since World War II has just surfaced here. Glittering with gold and silver on its 31 full-page miniatures and 10 pages of abstract design, to say nothing of the 1,500 or so illuminated initials, the German Gospel Book is almost as fresh as it must have looked around 1173-75, when it was completed at Helmarshausen Abbey by the monk Herimann.

The second secon The manuscript dropped from public sight "in 1939, when it was reported to be in Austria; it is believed to have been sold by the dukes of Brunswick after the war. Now it has reappeared, first shown to Sotheby's medieval manuscript expert, Christopber de Hamel, in late August. It will go on display at Sotheby's shortly before its scheduled sale Dec. 6. The provenance of the masterpiece has not been made public but it is perfectly clear that a work of such magnitude can only have come from a major collection.

No such Western manuscript has turned up in private hands, let alone in the market, in living memory. Sotheby's is quoting an expected sales figure in excess of £1 million ($1.5 million) but this can easily be doubled. Both cultural shock that the manuscript will make for months to come.

Only a handful of specialists were aware of its existence, essentially through the detailed account given in 1933 by Franz Jansen in his German book, "Helmarshansen Bookpainting at the Time of Henry the Lion." The shock of visual discovery 1 experienced was all the greater as the large-sized evangeliary - the four books of the Gospel - had been known only through the black and white plates of Jansen's book and a few earlier publications.

These drab reproductions completely fail to convey the illusion of fine low rehef suggested by the thick gold leaf and by the deep black outlines of the composition on vellum leaves.

Without seeing the manuscript in color, one tends to underestimate the significance of the discovery in relationship to medieval European culture. This can only be likened to what the sudden reappearance of a long-lost major work by Leonardo da Vinci or Raphael would represent for modern understanding of the Italian Renaissance. It is actually a good deal more than that, historically.

While just one more painting by Leonardo or Raphael, tantalizing as the idea might sound, would probably not greatly add to -let alone modify - modern perception of their figures are mere indications of the wave of centural shock that the manuscript will make far the most important work of its school. It is the only one that is signed by the artist and explicitly stated to have been executed at the abbey at Helmarshausen, 65 miles (105 kilometers) southwest of Brunswick, now in West

It is by far the most richly illustrated - the second-best manuscript has less than half as many miniatures, the third-best has 10, most have only 4 or fewer, and some none at all. When the manuscript was first discovered and published in 1858 by a German scholar, August Wilhelm Ambros, it created a sensation. In the next half-century, manuscript after manuscript was shown to be related to the Gospel Book until the total reached 19, including the latest in the entire series, completed in 1194 and now in Wolfensbüttel, West Germa-

But none comes anywhere near the Gospel Book, not just in the number of miniatures and the individual quality of each one but, above all perhaps, in their unique significance to medieval political history on the one hand and the changing nature of Christian religious ideas on the other.

Nor is this surprising. The book came into

Too Early Now to Stop Planting

by Joan Lee Faust

EW YORK - Just when gardeners thought they could wind down their activities and start putting their tools away, a major planting season confronts them: Autumn is best for many plants.

One advantage of planting at this time of year is that the weather is cooler and it is pleasanter to be outside without debilitating heat and humidity. There is also more consistent rainfall. Soil is naturally moist and roots grow rapidly.

At the outset, a tight planting schedule is difficult to set down for any activity that depends on weather. If the weather should begin to turn early and the soil start to freeze, gardeners will have to use their judgment. The criterion will be how well a plant can form a secure root system before cold weather. Since evergreens are never really dormant and are highly susceptible to winter sun burn, they must have a good root system. Needled evergreens, rhododendrons, azaleas, bollies and andromedas belong in this category.

A field study showed that landscape plants need four weeks from the time of planting to the onset of cold weather for sturdy root growth. Test plants that were set out late in the season with less chance for root regeneration did not fare well and were susceptible to winter injury.

Soil scientists and horticulturists who have studied root systems have found that, even though air temperatures may approach freezing, root growth continues in the top six inches of soil. As long as soil temperature remains about 40 to 45 degrees Fahrenheit (5 to 7 degrees centigrade), roots regenerate if the soil is moist.

Some things must be planted in the autumn. Lily bulbs are set out late because they are not dug for shipment until late October and early November. Since these bulbs are never truly dormant, lilies are planted in the ground as soon as received. The same is true for perennials such as peonies and hostas, which growers like to dig after a hard frost.

Hardy spring bulbs - daffodils, hyacinths and tulips as well as the smaller or minor bulbs such as crocus, cranthis, anemones and scillas mature during summer and are shipped from growers' fields for autumn planting. Since spring-flowering bulbs are rootless, they must be in the ground with enough time for a sturdy root system to form before soil freezes. These roots assure two things: absorption of soil moisture to support spring leaf and flower growth, and anchorage to strengthen the Spring-flowering bulbs can be planted any time now - the earlier the better, since roots will start to grow as soon as builbs are planted. Most bulb experts agree that mid-October is the cutoff time for planting to be sure that good roots form. But as long as the ground is open and can be dug, tulips can be planted at least until mid-November.

As days grow shorter and cooler, changes take place in the plants lves; they start to become dormant. Rather than absorbing nutrients from the soil to suppport new leaves and form flowers, plant ells become harder. Water content is reduced and walls become woody, For many plants — those that are called deciduous — the summer's leaves go through a final physiological change and drop off. Plants in this transition phase absorb the shock of transplanting readily, so landscape renovations continue well into November.

There are a few exceptions to the autumn planting tradition. Some things are better moved in spring. All fruits, both tree and berry, and grapevines establish better then. Trees with thin bark transplant better March, especially dogwood, Japanese Maple, birch, beech, flowering fruit trees such as cherry and peach and goldenrain tree. Roses are planted in spring because growers dig plants late in the season to grade and pot or wrap them for cold storage.

Since all but a few vegetables are annuals and not winter-hardy, they must be planted in spring. But many gardeners who experience high crop yields take an important step: They prepare their ground in the autumn. The vegetable patch is dug deeply, enriched with composts and manures to lie fallow

The instant there is a break in spring weather, vegetable planting can begin. Autumn soil preparation is necessary if small row greenhouses are used - metal hoops with a length of polyethylene cover. These covers shield vegetable garden rows from harsh winter nights, but serve as a warming greenhouse on sunny days. Under these vented covers, hardy salad crops such as lettuce, radish and spinach thrive.

One final deed: Apply fertilizer to evergreens, especially rhododendrons and azaleas, after leaves have dropped from shade trees. Nutrients will work their way down to root zones and be absorbed to support spring growth. Spring fertilizer applications depend on the weather, and often nutrients do not have time to work down to roots when needed.

Cutting the Cost of a U.S. Visit

by James T. Yenckel

▼ASHINGTON — Travelers who are flexible in their plans can often benefit from money-saving deals designed to fill empty airline seats and hotel beds. Two U.S. companies have put together intriguing offers aimed at cutting the cost of business and vacation trips, not only for Americans but for travelers who visit the United States regularly.

The first is Discovericard. The idea is that the traveler pays full rate for one night in a botel and gets the second night free. Membership is $30 a year and provides an identification card that members show at any of more than 300 hotels to get the two-for-one price. Accommodations are available in the top 100 U.S. business cities and top 40 U.S. vacation destinations, says Timothy Gaffney, president of Discovericard of Hartford, Connecticut. Generally, there's a choice of top, medium and budget hotels. Based on Mobil travel guide ratings, most are either two-star ("very good") or three-star ("excellent"). A copy of Mobil's rities guide is included in the membership fee. As examples, hotels in Boston include the Copley Plaza downtown and a suburban Ra-mada Inn. In New York City, it's the Milford Plaza, the Beverly in Manhattan and the Travelodge at J.F. Kennedy International Airport. Resort hotels inclode the Topnotch at Stowe, Vermont, and the Marriott at Disneyland in Anaheim, California, and Disney World in Orlando, Florida. In Washington, the L'Enfant Plaza Hotel is listed.

A directory of participating hotels is sent to cardholders twice a year. About 100 hotels are expected to be added when next January's directory is printed.

The catch is that the bargain is restricted to a hotel's off-peak periods, though on an average, says Gaffney, the offer is available 200 days a year. Open dates vary by hotel and sometimes include weekends.

Why the cut rates? "Hotels are in the same position as airlines," Gaffney says. "Empty seats produce no income. Here they are getting a full night's revenue, and they have a captive audience for the second day to market their lounge and restaurant."

raveltron is a new, California-based airline reservation agency that promises to search out the cheapest air fare between desti-nations in the United States. The service is free; Traveltron makes its money if you decide to book your flight with the company.

The complexities of the U.S. air fare structure are well-known. On one day last month, says a Traveltron vice president, Tom Davis, there were 40,000 changes in fares and schedules. The company says it keeps abreast of these changes through computers and specialized staff, which, unlike those at most other travel agencies, handle only airline reserva-

Traveltron also promises to seek out "creative" routing if that is cheaper. One day this month, it quoted a Washington-to-San Francisco round-trip fare of $318, via Piedmont Airlines to Charlotte, North Carolina, and Dalias, with a connecting American Airlines flight to San Francisco (leave Washington at 10 A.M., arrive in San Francisco at 5.37 P.M.). The cheapest nonstop supersaver fare was $356 (with comparable advance-purchase and length-of-stay restrictions) and the unrestricted coach fare was $838.

Travelers with flexibility who can take unusual routes, travel midweek or nights and book at least a week in advance have the best chance of getting the cheapest rates, says a ilized" is changed to Western European - the presumably held no strong opinions on the subject - the judgment remains valid. Henry the Lion is perhaps the most strik-ng case of a rising star within the aristocratic establishment in medieval Europe. Having successively come into the titles of Duke of Saxony, in 1142, when he is believed to have been about 14 years old, Count of Brunswick and finally Duke of Bavaria in 1156, Henry then made the right marriage. On Feb. I, 1168, he married Manida, elder daughter of Henry II of England and sister of Richard Lionheart.

cathedral, makes it almost certain that it was executed to be dedicated to the cathedral. In a color booklet printed for the convention of the International Society of Bibliophiles that opens Sept. 23 in Edinburgh, de Hamel makes a subtle observation: All the miniatures but one have pinpoint stitching holes in the upper margins. These are the marks left by sewn protective textile covers, probably silk, as was common in the 12th century. The one miniature that does not have the stitching holes is the one where Henry the Lion is shown presenting the Gospel Book. This is the page, de Hamel speculates, where the evange was meant to be left open on the high altar. For the commission, undoubtedly intended as an act of devotion, nevertheless had highly unusual political undertones.

At the time of the book's execution, Henry the Lion was nearing the apex of his power. He literally owned Bavaria and Anstria. He was richer and, arguably, more powerful than his first cousin, Frederick Barbarossa, the ruler of the Roman Germanic Empire, as the German successors of Charlemagne called the German lands of which they were the overlords. Henry was Barbarossa's potential rival as much as his declared ally. In the manuscript miniatures, Henry the Lion makes a most extraordinary, if implied, claim: In the coronation scene toward the end, the hand of God coming down from the sky is shown crowning Henry the Lion and his wife. In the medieval tradition, only kings and emperors were crowned by God as His

More subtle perhaps, but just as clear in its implications, is the use of gold lettering on purple throughout the manuscript. This was the imperial custom in Roman manuscripts; Charlemagne developed the tradition in the early ninth century for political reasons and the Ottonian imperial dynasty was still keeping it up in the 12th century. Medieval literati would have been vividly aware of the significance of such writing.

To reward his built the Manor House, which was originally a defeat of the armies of Louis XIV and Bavaria nie the Who?" was the heading in a recent Diary item in the Times of London, Roy Dotrice, an actor, at the Danube village of Blenheim two years later, she gave him the royal manor of Woodstock and a grant of £240,000 to build a palace.

Mariborough had to dip into his own purse to In the Red Drawing Room at Blenheim there is a boge John Singer Sargent portrait of the American Consuelo Vanderbilt, the first wife of the ninth duke, and her family, and the first state room has a Carolus Duran portrait of Consuelo at 17. She once said: "My mother wished my portrait to bear comparison with and Lawrence." All those portraits still hang in Blenheim along with tapestries of scenes of Mariborough's battles. At the north end of Vanbrugh's Long Library, 180 feet (55 meters) long, the eighth duke and his American duchess, formerly Lilian Price, installed a towering pipe organ, on which is inscribed: "In memory of bappy days and as a tribute to this glorious home we leave thy voice to speak within these walls in years to come when ours are still." Also in the Long Library are Churchill's notes for his biography of his father, Lord Randolph. Churchill's mother wrote of her first visit to that "huge and stately palace": "I confess I felt awed. But my American pride forbade the admission." According to the latest statistics of the British Tourist Board, Blenheim follows Shakespeare's birthplace and Anne Hathaway's cottage, in nearby Stratford-upon-Avon, and Leeds Castle in the list of Britain's most popular tourist attractions. One reason is that Blenheim and the 10 square miles that made up Queen Anne's grant to the first duke are full of history, from the days of Caesar, King Alfred, Ethelred the Uoready and the Norman kings to Chaucer, the civil war and the restoration of the monarchy under Charles II. The Domesday Book described Woodstock, which means a stockaded settlement in the woods, as one of the "demesne forests of the king." It was a royal preserve, great bunting country, at a time when all Oxfordshire was mostly forest, Henry L the third Norman king

hunting lodge. In it Henry II kept his mistress, the legendary Fair Rosamund, whom Queen Eleanor is reputed to bave poisoned with a curp of wine. Edward the Black Prince was born there in 1330, Henry VIII stayed there with his first wife, Catherine of Aragon, and Henry's daughter Elizabeth, at 20, was a prisoner there for plotting against her sister, Mary Tudor. Cromwell's war left it in ruins, to be razed by Sarah, the first Duchess of Marlborough. Vanbrugh used some of the stones to build the Grand Bridge on Bienheim's lake.

The old town of Woodstock sprang up by the royal estate to accommodate the king's retinue, with hostelries to eat and carouse in. Woodstock's Cockpit Close recalls medieval cockfighting. The 13th-century Bear Inn on the market place, where the High and Market streets meet, was oamed for the bear-baiting popular in Shakespeare's days. The Bear, part of the Mariborough property. was five centuries old when Queen Anne gave Woodstock Manor to Marlborough. One of England's original coaching inns, it is still noted for its food and ambiance. Woodstock is rare for today: It has no movie house on Woolworths, no high-rise buildings - it is mostly old two- and three-story dwellings and shops. There is oot even a railroad station: the pearest main line station is at Oxford, eight miles sooth. A Blenheim & Woodstock branch line was opened in 1890 to serve the palace and Woodstock, but was closed in 1954.

Frank Vickers, driver of Young's Garage, recalls having often seen Winston Churchill in Woodstock: "I remember when the ninth duke, Mr. Churchill's cousin, died in 1934, and Chorchill came to Woodstock on the funeral train. It was very hot and Mr. Churchill looked very red when be got off the train."

Thirty-one years later, oo a wintry January day, the old warrior was buried beside his parents in a quiet little country churchyard in the tiny village of Bladon, within sight of his

The Heart of Churchill Country | Shopping: Jade in Hong Kong

by Fred Ferretti

ONG KONG — Each morning just before 10, every day of the year, four blocks of Kowloon along Canton Road are transformed into a street lined with jade, a path called the Jade Market by Hong Kong's Western population but referred to by the Chinese as Jade Street. For a shopper it is a seductive wooderland of green temptation with more than 300 dealers sitting along Canton Road from Jordan Road to Saigon Street, under jerrybuilt awnings or large umbrellas, on camp chairs or on their haunch unfolding tables, cloths or racks of red satin-backed cards - al displaying jade rings, oecklaces, bracelets, pendants and carvings.

A woman ambles up the street with several dozen red, white and green jade necklaces suspended from her wrist and forearm, stopping whenever someone shows interest. Children watch the jade while their parents go off for tea or some food in one of the two oarrow alleys that cut through Jade Street, Ningpo Street and Nanking Street. In the street, ignoring the traffic, are other jade peddlers, dealing among themselves with a ritual so old that oobody can remember its origin. They bargain with their hands, but their hands are under cloths, white or black. One man or woman will hold a piece of jade in one hand while the other hand is hidden. The prospective buyer will put his hand under the cloth. Then they will speak. The seller might say yat and extend three lingers. Yat designates a unit of 100 and three lingers mean three units, or 300 Hong Koog dollars. The buyer will grab, perhaps, only one finger, which means he is offering 100 Hong Kong dollars. And so it goes, hands under cloths with units of 1,000 designated by teo, units of 10,000 by tra Jade Street is reputed to be the world's only open-air bazzar devoted entirely to jade, a gen that the Chinese regard with some degree of veneration. A beautiful woman is often called a woman of jade, and a handsome man is said to have a countenance of jade. Every Chinese baby is presented either with a tiny jade wrist bracelet or with a pi. a circular, smoothly polished piece of jade with a bole in the center, like a tiny doughnut of jade, for centuries a symbol of heaven. Confucius is said to have suggested that jade's smoothness represented gentleness of character, its varying colors and texture wisdom and nobility, its solidity one's duty toward one's neighbor.

Jade ornaments as symbols of wealth, rank and power were commonplace in the imperial courts of China. The emperor's scepter, sword, throne and altar, even his sandals, were usually of highly prized ornately carved jade. A flat stone, shaped octagonally, with a hole in its center, is often worn as a talisman to ward off evil spirits.

Its mythology notwithstanding, jude is a highly regarded stone among all people, and to shop for it in the Jade Street bazaar is an extraordinary experience. You cannot belp but be goggle-eyed as you watch the jade sellers unpack their stones and oroaments from satchels, schoolbags, cookie tins, food containers and plastic bags, and spread them out for

Know a bit about jade before you go, resolve to bargain hard and long -mainly because that is more than half the fun of shopping in Jade Street - and make up your mind that you will spend oo more than $20 or $25, and you will have a rewarding time. Bear in mind that some of the imperial green jade might be chemically color-enhanced (genuine imperial green jade is the most desirable), and that the men and women who sell jade know a good deal more than you do and will give away differing grades of red, called fet by the Chinese, or green, called trui.

Green is most highly prized; when it is deep apple, pure in color, with no traces of either deep bottle green or white, and almost transparent, it is considered to be the finest. It is not unusual for a tiny stone of imperial jade to sell for as much as $10,000. Nephrite, which can be pale green bot is mostly creamy white or off-

What is known as jade is either jadeite or nephrite. Jadeite comes in white, is often called mutton fat and is best for carving. But jade can come in shades of brown, rust, almost yellow, peach, almost blue, gray and black. Some black and gray jade, deeply carved into bracelets, is highly thought of by the Chinese, and often people are buried with jade bracelets of these colors on their wrists. Such pieces are called, appropriately, Dead Jade. The traders along Jade Street will tell you, "Chinese jade, Chinese Think what would look best hanging from a gold chain around your neck, what would look best sitting on a carved teak stand on your mantel. Then make an offer, or ask a price and make a counteroffer. That is when the fun begins, I remember seeing what I considered a nice piece of carved jade, of a the equivalent of about $50. "No," I said, and began walking away.

"How much?" called the seiler.
"One bundred," I called back.

"No," he said, shaking his head with great sadness. "Okay," I said and continued walking.

"OKAY!" be called after me. Back I went and bought the carving for 100 Hong Kong dollars, a little more than $15 U.S. And I was satisfied. Did I get a bargain? I thought so. Did the seller make a profit? I'm sure be did. Were we both happy? I'm pretty sure we were. And that is the essence of shopping

The part of Canton Road called Jade Market or Street is convenient from both sides of Victoria Harbor. From Hong Kong island, the Jordan Road Ferry will deposit you about two blocks from the intersection of Jordan and Canton Roads. Berlin, Lively East and West by James M. Markham ERLIN - There may be something in our daft late 20thcentury consciousness that connects political absurdity and cultural liveliness. This may help explain wby Berlin — and not just West Berlin but in Connects political absurdity and not just West Berlin, but its Communist east side, too - is the most exciting and amusing city in Germany. In either Germany, East or During the day, the western side of the city throbs with life in the cafes along the Kurfürstendamm (or Ku-damm as it is familiarly known); at night, the boulevard, a combination of the Champs-Hystes and Times Square, goes ablaze in garish neon, demarcating West Berlin even more dramatically from the subdued, darkened east side. Excitement has relatively little to do with beauty in Berlin, The Allied bombardments during World War II flattened Hitler's capital, and what became West Berlin was hastily rebuilt in the utilitarian and egalitarian spirit of the resurfaced Social Democrats, who had a long pre-Nazi tradition of running the place. What became East Berlin was done in even more severe tonalities - vast, impersonal boulevards and massive working-class housing blocks - befitting an insecure Communist regime that even today struggles to overcome a lingering sense of illegiti-

No, the excitements of Berlin are of the cultural or spiritual variety, which, after all, is rather German.

While Berliners have always been a witty lot, it is the postwar division of the ciry that has sharpened sensitivities and generated the kinds of pressures and anomalies that make the place (or West Berlin at least) attractive to artists, composers, novelists and filmmakers. A willingness by Boun to subsidize West Berlin — an outpost of freedom, a beachhead on the long, long road to German unity — helps to make the artist's situation financially tenable. So does a stout Berlin tradition of Kulturpolitik, which assumes that one of the duties of government is to give people good opera, symptony and theater. East and West Berlin have an astonishingly good collection of museums, too.

West Berlin's situation is manifestly absurd. Stuck 110 miles (176) kilometers) inside the German Democratic Republic, the half-city is girdled by 29 miles of a 15-foot (4.6-meter) wall, which itself is buttressed by tank traps, mines, cavesdropping devices and dog runs. When you clamber up to the sightseeing platform oo the western side of Potsdamer Platz, East German border guards peer back at you through The wall gives West Berlin, at first glance, the feel of a besieged city. But — and this is one of the paradoxes that Berlin thrives on — West

Berlin is in a sense besieging East Berlin, and all of East Germany, for The Communists built the wall in 1961 not to do anything to West Berlin, but to prevent West Berlin from undercutting the building of Socialism in East Germany, Pre-wall, the best minds - the engineers and doctors and architects - had been draining away. Even today, for the East, West Berlin is a standing affront, a challenge, and it is suggestive that on the East German-made maps of the city West Berlin appears as a streetless gray zone, a blank. "Here live lions." medieval explorers used to jot on charts when warning about dangerous stretches of Africa. Yet West Berlin, with 25,000 acres (10,068 hectares) of rivers, lakes, parks and farmland, feels anything but barren, or

The siege of East Germany is carried on by West German television (and to a lesser extent Western radio), which is watched by an estimated 70 percent of the 16.7 million Germans who live under Communism. This means that most East Germans, and particularly East Berliners, live, emotionally, in the evenings in the West, and have a pretty good ides of what life is like there. This has put extraordinary pressures on the East German anthorities, and lately they have cut down the propaganda content of their own programming and increased the quantity of Charlie Chaplin and other Western classic films on their own airwaves, just to compete. But West German television has had a corrosive, alienating impact on East Germans' attitudes toward their own rulers.

It's easy to go to the other side to find out. Just take the U-Bahn (underground), which is run by West Berlin, or the S-Bahn (elevated train), which is run by the East Germans, to Friedrichstrasse in East Berlin, Underground, you get in a line of American and European tourists. to the second se because of their age and presumed political harmlessness are allowed to shuttle to the west and back. As the East Germans are cash bungry, they let most visitors in on an East Berlin day visa without asking any questions - just 30 Deutsche marks, or $11. Don't lose the stamped piece of paper that constitutes your visa. The colors of the stamp are changed during the day to prevent attempted forgeries. (Above ground, non-Germans may also cross at Checkpoint Charlie by car or on foot.)

From the innards of the U-Bahn, you emerge into a buman and architectural landscape that is ghostly quiet, almost frozen io time. People walk more slowly in East Berlin than in West Berlin. Dumpy little cars have furny names like Wartburg, which is a castle where Martin Luther once took refuge. The soldiers in their flared belinets goose-step when they march past the Monument to the Victims of Militarism and Fascism on Uoter den Linden. If you inquire about this, you will be told that the goose step was a perfectly good Prussian tradition that was perverted by the Nazis. As the East German authorities contend that their state is derived from the resistance to Nazism, they have no troubles with the goose step.

A fascinating and sustained argument for this line of thought is the Museum für Deutsche Geschichte, or the Museum for German History - for me the most interesting place in East Berlin - on Uoter deo Linden. Exhibit by exhibit, you walk through the Marxist approach to the German past, which demonstrates that the good guys of history ended up building the German Democratic Republic for the benefit of the workers and the peasants. An embarrassing little detail like the 1953 uprising against the East German regime is explained as a Western-inspired putsch that was happily put down "in the spirit of proletarian internationalism supported by the Soviet Army." A glass case contains some American brass knuckles and a pocket knife with a swastika on it: arms found on the dangerous putschists. Further along, one comes to a kind of altar bearing the year 1961. Without ever mentioning the building of the wall, a plaque relates that in this historic year decisive action was taken "in defense of the gains of

More classical fare awaits at the so-called Museum Island, behind the recently refurbished Berlin Cathedral, or Dom, where four separate museums buddle together. The best is the Pergamon Museum, with its fine collection of Oriental and Greco-Roman antiquities. If you're feeling adventurous, walk into the Humboldt University and chat up the students. No one will stop you. When given a chance, young East Germans are eager for cootact with Westerners. For a complete change of pace, take the subway ont to Grunau on the outer fringes of East Berlin on the pleasant Dahme River. If you happen to be with West German friends, it's fun and relatively easy to try to pick out West and East Germans by their clothes and the way they walk "It used to be a lot easier a few years ago," explains a West German companion. "But now all of the East German kids have jeans, and even the jeans they make here look like our jeans." Have coffee and cake at the cafe Liebig, a turn-of-the-century Jugendstil (or Art Nouveau) gem that is a relief from the east side's relentless proletarian gray. Back to the West, where die Szene - West Berlin's countercultural. revolutionary, draft-dodging, ecological, feminist, homosexual, antiouclear, dropout, squatter scene - has mellowed some in the last year or so. If you drop in at the cafe Einstein on Kurfürstenstrasse - a tranquil place with a grassy terrace out back where there are poetry readings and jazz sessions at night — the talk in some instances has turned downright defeatist. Squatters, you are told, are being turfed out of their tenements. and nobody's protesting anymore. Good news for the city fathers, one

For all its wackiness, die Szene accentuates the experimental, frontier atmosphere, and helps make West Berlin the most informal city in Germany. The old Berlin aristocracy is long gone, destroyed by the war or panicked out of town by the successive Berlin crises of the cold war.

There is so much to do in West Berlin that you really have to make a strategic decision what not to do. One of the most reassuring realizations m such a time squeeze is that West Berlin (oot East) is the only German city that really stays up at night. One night, with three friends, at 3 A.M. I walked down the Kurfürstendamm to my hotel, the Kempinski, and ordered orange juice for everyone in the bar. The barman happily served them up. In any other West German city, you might get arrested for such comportment; in any case, you would not find a bar open at 3 A.M.

5 1983 The New York Times

Indeed, Henry the Lion's political claim might perhaps even account for the strangely archaic feel there is about the manuscript, which, at times, strongly leans on a much-earlier iconographic tradition. The very idea of commissioning a large-sized Gospel Book, de Hamel points out, was a tribute to the past. The trend at that time was toward having both testaments, old and new, copied in a single volume. Above all the Gospel Book was being replaced by the sacramentary as the service book used for celebrating Mass. By the 13th century, large illustrated religious books are almost invariably sacramentaries or psalters, not Gospel Books. This deliberate choice implies that Henry the Lion saw himself as the upholder of the ancient imperial custom of dedicating Gospel Books. The fact that tradition was cultivated for a political purpose, not through a rejection of modernity, is demonstrated by the surprising intrusion of utterly modern ideas in some scenes. In one showing Mary Magdalene at Jesus' Tomb, the scrolls coming out of the mouth of the characters do not carry biblical quotations. They are based on a contemporary Easter Passion Play from Norman Sicily; in other words, on biblical events as perceived through their theatrical performance. This is Not only that -influences from all over the

ings of the manuscript, which provides a unique case of cross-cultural currents at that time. In 1172-73, Henry the Lion was in Constantinople, the guest of Emperor Manuel, who presented him with relics and many other precious gifts. The impact of Byzantine art, partic-exceedingly rare at that period.

ularly that of brocade, is perceptible in the Gospel Book. The handling of figures, with their monumental quality, probably owes a lot to it as well.

Another source of influence was England, so much so that a German scholar was led to assume that Matilda, on marrying Henry the Lion in 1168, must have brought English manuscripts with her. And yet this manuscript that deliberately looked back to an early imperial tradition, while simultaneously reflecting the influence of vastly different cultures in Europe, reveals several unique compositions. The painter was no upholder of an archaic tradition bot a striking innovator. The image of God enclosed in a mandorla - the almondshaped halo of divine light - amid the six days of creation, so identified by captions running in their circular frames, is highly unusual and original. It is as bold in composition as it is in concept: Time represented as space around

God, who is beyond time and space.

Bolder still is the image of Jesus' ascension, divided into two horizontal panels. In the lower one, the Virgin and apostles are watching the tall, vertical body of Jesus rising into heaven by leaving the confines of one horizontal miniature across the ruling that divides it from the upper horizontal miniature.

Equally rare is a miniature of the Virgin Mary surrounded by the 12 apostles. Above them, the gifts of the Holy Ghost are mentioned in seven circular frames enclosing doves flying down. These frames are the terminal points of seven radiating bands of light that 2.05 3.000 32 1.50 59 40 2.25 54 1.73 2.64 5.18 80 1.50 40

Outlook Bright for TV Components Despite Their Price and Complexity

NEW YORK — Those shopping for new television sets these days are increasingly confronted with video component systems, television's answer to stereo components.

Many people in the consumer electronics industry agree that the video systems, which have been on the market for about two years, have a bright long-term outlook, but some have doubts about their immediate acceptance.

"Component television is just beginning, like component hi-fi systems were 30 years ago," said James Magid, an industry analyst for L.F. Rothschild, Unterberg, Towbin. "They account for probably less than I percent of the sets sold, but it's clear that down the road a large percentage of the sets will be video component systems."

A traditional TV receiver has a built-in tuner, speakers and screen, all in one cabinet. The component system comprises separate television monitor, speakers and tuners, a package that is likely to cost more than an average color television set. The idea is to obtain a higher quality picture and better For example, a fully equipped, remote-controlled Sony Trinitron with a 19-inch screen sells in New York for $1,000, while Sony's 19-inch video monitor, with separate speakers and tuner, costs almost $1,500, according to Edward Adis, senior vice president of consumer products for

Just a few years ago, video component systems could be found only in television studios or in the homes of high-tech buffs knowledgeable enough to build their own systems.

But in May 1981, Sony introduced the Pro-feel, the first mass market video system. Now, according to the Electronic Industries Association, a creased their output in recent - trade group that represents manufacturers, almost all major consumer electronics companies have video component systems on the market, including Hitachi, NEC, Magnavox, Sharp, Toshiba, Sony, Panasonic, Teknika and IVC

"The thinking behind the video component system was that, with the video revolution; there was a need for something beyond the average television set," Mr. Adis said. "With video cassettes, video cameras, videodisks, computers, there was a demand for something that could accommodate all these items."

A video component system permits users to plug in home computers, stereos and other machines not usually associated with TV receivers. Not Ready for Everyone

"Television componentry is just like audio componentry, with people own wanting to build on to their television sets," said Jack Wayman, vice "president of the Electronic Industries Association.

He said that, just as audio components evolved as people became more electronically sophisticated, customers are learning about video components and the machines are becoming more complex. But many people in the electronics industry say the systems are not yet ready for just anyone. Video component systems are still not for the normal person, they're for the videophiles," said Robert Gerson, managing editor of Television Digest, a trade newsletter on consumer electronics. "With all the switches and plugging and unplugging of one thing into another — your normal person doesn't want to be bothered with all of that stuff. You've got to be a video person to even know you need one of these things." He added, "The audio companies are looking at video component systems as their way in the door of the video market world. They feel that this is a concept - components - that they know how to sell."

'Educational Process'

reasons, have not sold as well as they had expected. One problem is price. "The growth pattern has not been as fast and great as we hoped." Mr. Adis said. "What has been holding component systems back is the educational process. Most dealers are used to selling a box, whereas with component systems you have to prove to consumers that it's worth the

One company that is not convinced of the future of the video component systems is the RCA Corp. ...

"We think it's a little premature for video component systems," said David Croner, vice president of marketing operations for RCA's consumer electronics division. "Our dealers are telling us that the component buyer is a person who is heavily into video. But consumers haven't embraced a separate components system as of yet; they want a more

RCA does market a simplified video system, consisting of a monitor and a receiver, or what Mr. Croner called "the nucleus of the video component system." RCA's monitor-receiver, he said, was designed for people not yet ready for the video component system.

The Tale of Woe at Warner Amex Cable Firm's Problems Stem From Drive to Wire Cities

By Sandra Salmans

New York Times Service NEW YORK -- When Harricane Alicia ripped through Houston last month, it knocked out service of the city's new cable television system for a week. That was just one of a series of devastations to the Warner Amex system and, in its customers' view, the most forgivable; the other disasters have all been man-made. "If I were God," said Drew Lewis, chairman and chief executive officer of Warner Amex Cable prognosis is favorable, the troubles of Warner Amex, the joint venture by Warner Communications and American Express, are immense.

For the estimated $800 million it has sunk into cable, it has only 1.3 million subscribers, or one subscriber for every $600 spent, a cost well above the industry average. By the time it finishes wiring Milwaukee and New York, its oewest franchises, it will have invested $1.3 billion.

In addition, it has $700 million in debt, on which it is paying an estimated $75 million a year. It is beleaguered by complaints of poor service that have led to a number of customer cancellations. Its program services, Nickelodeon and MTV, the musie channel, will together lose $16 million this year, and that is just a fraction of its total losses. Those (Continued on Page 13, Col. 3)

Brazilians Sign Letter to IMF on Economic Goals

BRASILIA — Brazil signed a letter of intent Thursday to be delivered to the International Monetary Fund, officials said, setting out tough new economic targets the Latin American nation will aim for in exchange for foreign loans.

The letter was signed by Finance Minister Ernane Galveas and Affouso Celso Pastore, the president of the central bank, and sent to Brazil's permanent representative with the IMF in Washington, Alexandre Kafka, according to Finance Ministry spokesman Pedro Luis Rodrigues.

Meanwhile the foreign relations committee of the Brazilian lower house called on the government to submit the new IMF accord to congressional approval, a demand the military government has already

Although the final text of the letter was not immediately disclosed, Mr. Galveas Wednesday explained outlines of the new restraint program to members of the National Monetary Council. The letter, which if approved by the IMF would free urgently needed multi-billion dollar loans for the oear-bankrupt Latin American nation, calls for inflation currently around 150 percent to be pulled back to 55 to 60 percent by Deceminterest repayments on another $2 billion owed to governments and government institutions while it renegotiates these loans via the so-called Club of Paris, which is made up of representatives of industrial nations who handle renegotiations on government-to-government

U.S. Current Account Deficit Grew To Record $9.7 Billion in Quarter

WASHINGTON - The U.S. current account showed a record quarter of the year, government figures indicated Thursday.

The Commerce Department re-port said the huge deficit was mainly due to a widening in the deficit for trade in merchandise, as exports declined and the United States stepped up imports of a "broad range of commodities." In addition to trade in merchandise. the current account includes such nonmerchandise items as services and earnings oo investmeots

Warner Amex Cable Is Facing Immense Problems

By contrast, many cable companies, such as Time loc.'s American Television and Communications, have concentrated on smaller towns and suburbs, shunning the cities because of their logistical and political complexity. "We were so anxious to get the franchises, we oversold," said Mr. Lewis, who joined the company in

Old Court International Reserves Limited

CHAIRMAN'S STATEMENT 1983

"When we formed Old Court International Reserves Limited (OCIRL) in the summer of 1980, we could not foresee that it would prove so popular or fulfil such a range of needs for investors. We believe that OCIRL owes its success to the unique combination of principles on which it is based – a managed deposit service in the currency of the investor's choice. It combines a high degree of security and liquidity for the investor, and a simple means of switching between currencies.

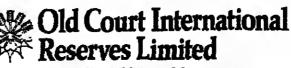

In its last financial year, OCIRL grew from US$242 to US$786 million and to US$1,006 million at the time of writing, continuing the substantial growth since formation. OCIRL's size gives its investors significant benefits, particularly in the reduction of costs and in obtaining competitive interest rates and foreign exchange conversion rates. As well as the US Dollar, Deutschemark, Sterling and now the Japanese Yen, seven other currencies are available to investors.

The difficult international environment has emphasised the need for safe investments but fluctuating foreign exchange markets have also given investors favourable opportunities.

Many investors know what currencies they would like to hold and do not need professional advice, but those investing larger amounts may opt for a professional currency selection service. There are presently 261 such shareholders who have a total investment of US$60 million.

The first serious money market funds were established a decade ago in the United States of America and catered solely for US Dollars. When we launched OCIRL, it was the first money market fund to apply this concept to a range of currencies. I firmly believe that the international money market fund has worldwide appeal and that, in the long term, OCIRL will continue to meet it."

Group of 10 Turns Down IMF Request

By Hobart Rowen Washington Post Service

PARIS - Finance officials of the Group of 10, representing the world's richest nations, confirmed Thursday that they had not approved a request by the Internagency loans to fill a $6-billion to $8-billion "commitment gap" that IMF officials say they face by the end of the year, Lamberto Dini of the Bank of Italy, who was chairman of a meeting of the officials, said after the meeting that the group had ques-tioned whether the IMF had a real need" for the funds now.

Mr. Dini also said that "major countries are now opposed" to allowing the IMF to borrow in the commercial market. The reason, it was learned, is that this might be banks, which are refusing to lend directly to Third World countries but which would be happy to lend to the IMF.

The IMF's managing director, Jacques de Laronère, had sought $3 billion in emergency funding from the central banks of the major industrial nations, to be matched by $3 billion from Saudi Arabia.

Another reason the funding was not approved is that the Europeans in the Group of 10 resent the U.S. Congress's delay of approval for the $8.4-billion U.S. contribution to enlarged resources for the IMF: Mr. Dini did not discuss the role this resentment has played, but it is known to have been a central fac-

In addition, Finance Minister Jacques Delors of France has complained that Mr. de Larosière, in seeking the $3 billion, did not ask the United States to participate. Mr. de Larosiere is known to be-

make it more difficult to get the $8.4-billion appropriation through Congress. As it is, passage is uncer-tain. A conference committee is attempting to reconcile differences in House and Senate versions of the.

Mr. Dini said that this issue was not mentioned at Thursday's meeting. He added that the countries that would have to participate in the 53-billion funding would "want to evaluate very carefully the need for these funds." The question, he said, is whether the so-called com-mitment gap needs to be filled immediately. Eventually, Mr. Dini said, "it must be filled."

The European officials' response to this calculation, it was learned, was that the new quotas would provide the IMF with about $15 billion to $20 billion in hard currencies; the $8.4-billion U.S. bill includes

Mr. de Larosière says the com-

Mr. Regan, in a statement pre-pared for delivery to the House Appropriations subcommittee on foreign operations, also attempted to calm congressional concerns about the legislation.

The cost for the United States of failure to provide the IMF with adequate resources - in terms of millions of lost jobs, higher interest rates, and the health of our banking system - would far exceed the

Mexico Cutting Imports, Models in Auto Industry

By Richard J. Meislin New York Times Service

MEXICO CITY - Mexico is planning a major reorganization of its troubled automobile industry to reduce its reliance on imports and achieve "internationally competitive scales" of production. Under the plan, which was an-nounced Wednesday by the Minis-try of Commerce and Industrial Development and which became effective Thursday, automobile manufacturers as well as makers of

The press offices of Ford and General Motors said there was no one available to comment on the government declaration.

The plan seeks to avoid a repetition of the problems the industry had between 1978 and 1981 - a boom period for Mexico because of its oew-found oil earnings - when demand grew quickly, the Industri-

AFRICAN FOLKTALES: Traditional Stories of the Black World

Selected and Retold by Roger D. Abrahams. 354 pp. $20 hardback, $10.95 paperback. Pantheon, 201 East 50th St., New York, N.Y. 10022.

Reviewed by Christopher West Davis

OUNT Kenya is burning!" a group of Kikuyu students once sang for a baffled visitor while Mount Kenya itself stood glaciered sentry on the skyline. "We must plant green leaves so the porcupine will not laugh at What does it mean?

"It is impossible to explain," one girl explained. "It is just funny . . . and beautiful." Prank, riddle or poignant pun, epic, proverb or debate, African folktales have been stalked and snared by anthropologists now for centu-ries. Resisting extinction, they have been quiet-ly revealing their place in the pattern of world by revening in the help of people like Roger Abrahams. In his latest offering, "African Folktales: Traditional Stories of the Black World," the Scripps College scholar provides another masterful addition and accessible introduction to the captured myths of what the Mende call "God's Chiefdom."

Most of the stories here are disembodied scripts, pulled from performance and ceremony and deprived of the gestures and musical charms of a good storyteller. The characters seem measy in print, gagged and bound, threatening to leap off the page and take their revenge on the tyranny of Western syntax. They seem as unbridled as Giriama drumming written out on the five-line staff.

But what's lost in translation is made up for in presentation. Abrahams sensibly groups the tales thematically into five sections — the fantastic "Tales of Wonder from the Great Ocean of Stories"; the open-ended "Stories to Discuss and Even Argue About"; the sadistic exploits of "Trickster and Other Ridiculous Creatures"; to adventure "Tales in Praise of Great Doings"; and lessons to help in "Making a Way Through Life."

Drawing on a variety of sources and translation styles, Ahrahams gives, in all, 45 tribes the chance to tell nearly a hundred stories. Sweeping across the continent as swiftly as a pair of enchanted Togo sandals, the juxtaposition of tribes and pacing of story lengths makes for lively reading. It also invites the reader to view the stories as a whole, as the collective treasu of one people, laying aside all the individual influences that may have shaped each tribe's view of the world. Abrahams has packaged an example of what stories provide in the African tradition - a world of reference portraying "the basic stuff of life . . . vitality in opposi-tion." As Abrahams explains, the lock-horned relationships of hot and cold, day and night, sky and earth, male and female are never resolved, only dramatized.

Abrahams never mentions the parallel here to the Chinese "Yin-Yang" dynamic; and to the layman, it is only one of the many temptations to read external influences into these samples of African folklore. Several plots and details prick the mind weared on Western myths: the Besuto king who threw his daughter out of the village (and into the laws of an ogre) because she had eaten the fruit of a forbidden tree; the Swahili tale of a certain sultan who gave orders that all male children born in his kingdom should be put to death (the only survivor developing into a supernatural hero); the glorious destiny of Mwindo foretold by his unusual (Caesarean) birth, all seem more that coincidence. The evidence of whether they are may be lost forever - that has happen before, but the Great Ocean of Stories goes on bathing all shores, being fed by all rivers.

There are stories with surer lineage, stories in what Abrahams calls "international circulation." "The Password" is the Dahomey version of "Ali Baba and the 40 Thieves," and "Demane and Demazana" the Kaffir variation on "Hansel and Gretel." Both, in their choices of plot and prop, offer an intimate glimpse into Africa.

But it is the power of the wisdom and poetry in these stories that makes them worth reading Even Swift would get a wry chuckle out of the ribald Hausa tale that ends with the proverb:
"When you see water flowing uphill, it means someone is repaying a kindness." And for advice wrapped in a twist of phrase, Gassire, the great Sounke hero, speaks in language worthy of Macbeth:

The rest of us incline more to life than fame. And while we do not wish to die fameless, we have no wish to die for fame alone."

The story of Gassire and his lute is as much a miniature novel as any in Borges's "Ficciones." But for sheer mystery and delight, few sto-ries in this collection rival "Never Ask Me About My Family." a Kikuyu tale from the foot of Mount Kenya.

One day, Mwenendega, the handsome son of a poor man, meets a beautiful girl by the river. She was "very attractive, fair as the moon and bright as the stars in the sky, with a halo on her head like a rainbow. She was timid and silent like the sun."

The girl, who remains nameless, agrees to an abrupt proposal of marriage, but only on one condition - Mwenendega must never ask about her father or mother or country during their whole life together. He agrees, but years later, overjoyed by the circumcision ceremony of their first child, Mwenendega forgets his promise. He wants to know why his wife's parents have not come to see their grandchild on such a happy day. The spell from the interlocking forces is broken.

The wife jumps into the air and lands making a crater seven miles deep, "all the while shooting in the air stones, trees, rubble and mud, like a blast of gunpowder." Then she screams, "My father, my mother and all my kinfolk, where are they? Children of Mboto, come out." It would be unfair to spoil the ending for the reader and tell of the creatures that awoke on Mount Kenya, came down into the village and what they did there. Suffice it to say that it's the reason all wise Kiknyns keep a close eye on the glacier-tipped mountain —the throne of God's chiefdom threatens more than the laugh of a porcupine.

Christopher West Davis taught in Kenya and is at work on a book about Africo. He wrote this review for The Washington Post.

He entered his hand with a heart lead to suff a club, but when he tried to return to his band with another heart East ruffed and played his last trump. There was now no way to avoid the loss of a trick in each minor suit for down one.

Notice that a shift to the singleton heart at the second trick would not have been an effective defense. South would have won in his hand, ruffed a club and led the diamond king with decisive impact. In the

ITT W. German Unit Contract for Satellite

NEW YORK --- ITT Corp. said Thursday that its Standard Eletrik Lorenz unit in West Germany had won a $32-million contract to manwon a $32-million contract to manufacture systems for a telecommunications satellite to be launched for the state telecommunications agency in early 1987.

The systems will be used in the satellite and its ground stations, the company said. The West German agency intends to expand the cable and radio relay network in the federal republic and in West Berlin prior to the satellite's launch.

NEW YORK -- "Anybody got any money?" the young woman asked."-Everyone in the group searched pockets. "Why?" one said. "What do you want?"

"An ice-cream cone. Strawberry."

After winning $144,000 in prize money during the last two weeks, plus a $500,000 bonus, Martina Navratilova was broke. Enough change was collected, and soon she had her reward.

After a taste, Navratilova, now known as the $6million woman, turned to a friend and said with a broad smile, "I've been waiting for this."

It was the end of a week that she will always remember. After failing to win the U.S. Open singles title in 10 previous attempts, she added it to her two-year reign as the dominant woman in tennis. With a icturesque straight-set triumph over Chris Evert Lloyd in the final Saturday, she gained her seventh Grand Slam title, raised her 1983 record to 66-I, won the 35th tournament of the 50 in which she has played in the last three years, and beat Evert for the 21st time in their last 27 meetings. And as if that were not enough, she teamed with Pam Shriver on Sunday to win her third U.S. Open doubles title. Thus, Navratilova increased her career earnings to $6,113,756, more than any other player, male or

"It was nice waking up today and reading the papers," Navratilova said, moments after she and Shriver completed a three-set victory over Rosalyn Fairbank and Candy Reynolds. "I had a quiet night, kind of, I really couldn't celebrate too much because I had to play today. I had a couple of glasses of champague. I know that's why it took me so long to get

There was hardly a lack of motivation for her in the two weeks - even off the court. Besides her quest for the singles title, there was her long rivalry with Evert. More than a few tennis followers have said that because of the 26-year-old Navratilova's dominance, aggressive style of play and athletic ability, she is the suggestion last week that her nemesis would think of ing the clite group.

"It happens every time a great player comes along," said Evert. "But the conditions are different, times are

In reply, Navratilova said: "My two years can stand

Before the final, Evert, the defending champion who admitted to being the underdog, said her only real advantage was mental toughness. "I've been through a whole career," she said. "That's my biggest asset. Martina's just achieved her success. I know that men-stroller. tally, that could still be a vulnerable part of ber if meone gets an advantage."

The trouble is, said Navratilova, that no one gets an advantage. "She's just trying to stay in the game, psychologically," she said of Evert's view. "The way I'm playing now, it's easy to be mentally tough. Besides, you can't measure that I hope now she's knows I'm just as tough as she is."

Among others with the credentials to stake such a claim were Maureen Connolly Brinker, Suzanne Lenglen, Helen Wills, Margaret Smith Court, Billie Jean King and, most recently, Evert, who bristled at the together or anything. But until then, there is much to do. Physically, Navratilova is already highly conditioned. But she is after more. "I like to make my body do things that haven't been done before," she said. "I want to reach my limit."

There is still the Grand Slam — the French, Wimbledon, U.S. and Australian titles that must be won in succession. This year Navratilova took Wimbledon in addition to the U.S. Open, with the Australian scheduled in December. "That takes a whole year," she said, "so I can't relax

now. If you lose, you have to start all over."
Her only loss this year was in the French on clay to Kathy Horvath, Evert has dominated her on that surface, winning all seven of their meetings. Their last meeting on clay was in 1981 in a tournament at Amelia Island, Florida. The score was 6-0, 6-0. It was Evert's only shutout in the rivalry. That, too, was in the back of the champion's mind.

"I want Chris on clay," she said. "I haven't played her on it since I started playing well. At the French— that would be right—I want to beat her." She paused, then added, "Tin ready."

The $6-Million Woman of Tennis: 'I Want to Reach My Limit' Liberty Wins Again meant the most. And that her victory had come against Evert made the strawberry cone taste even better. NEWPORT, Rhode Island -Liberty caught Australia II on one second race, leading by 21 seconds wind shift and blew it away on going into the second upwind leganother to catapult into a com-manding 2-0 lead Thursday in the 25th defense of the America's Cup.

Australia II, however, flew the rotest flag as it crossed the finish line. There was no word on what the protest concerned.

Liberty has now turned back the innovative Australian 12-meter, one of the most formidable challengers in Cup history, in different conditions on consecutive days.

And for the second day in a row. close race turned into a rout on the final leg as the Australians ran Liberty won Thursday by 1 minute, 33 seconds in calm seas and diminishing but shifting winds that were supposed to be ideal for the Australians' revolutionary winged keel. The Americans won Wednesday by 1 minute, 10 seconds in seven series to keep yachting's most prized trophy in the United States, where it has been for 132 years. The third race is scheduled Friday on Rhode Island Sound, unless the Australians request a lay day to

For the Australians, who lost just six of 54 races in a summer of trials been a week of frustration.

On Wednesday, they were on Liberty's stern ready to turn for the final 4.5 miles when they were foiled by a broken steering gear pulley. On Thursday, they had to send a man aloft for more than 10 minntes for a midrace mast correction and they were slowed at one turn when their adjustable mast appeared to be too straight.

Nevertheless, the challengers still seemed in command in the supposedly their strength with the winds down to the 10-knot range. But if Australia II was in control of the race, it wasn't in control of the tricky wind. That was the domain of the Liberty skipper, Dennis Conner. The American skipper, who defended the Cup aboard Freedom against Australia in 1980, switched to a bigger foresail and sailed to the right side of the course, closer to

The tactic worked.

Liberty picked up an offshore breeze from the mouth of the Sakonnet River and passed the Australians. By the time the boats turned for the final leg, downwind to Liberty's favor, Conner had stretched the lead to 48 seconds.

Australia II had been forced to choppy seas and gusty winds.

Liberty, which crossed the finish as its bending mast seemen was standing too straight to expose enough sail for maximum speed.

Liberty held a seemingly safe 31second lead going to the last leg, 4.5 miles upwind, but the Australians weren't through. The wind was changing almost constantly, and Australia II, skippered by John Bertrand, caught one of the shifts himself to pull almost even.

The two boats tacked and against other foreign boats, it has tacked, zigzagging for position, and the Australians appeared to have the weather edge.

But then the wind changed again, a sudden shift to the east that pushed Liberty to more than a 300-yard tead.

From there, Conner simply protected his lead, and Bertrand was unable to find one last gust that might have pushed the Australians back into the race.

Liverpool Lackluster In Victory

LONDON - Liverpool and Ajax Amsterdam, the main challengers for SV Hamburg's title in the European Champions' Cup, produced lackinster performances in their opening matches Wednesday night.

 Liverpool, the champion in 1977, 1978 and 1981, could manage only a 1-0 victory on the road against the Danish champion, Odense, on a 14th-minute goal by the Scottish international Kenny Dalglish. Ajax, the champion for three against visiting Olympiakos, which is now favored to advance when it plays Ajax in Greece in the second Hamburg has a bye in the first round.

The defending champion in the Cup Winners' Cup, Aberdeen, had to wait until the 88th minute before Mark McGhee scored the winning goal against Akranes for a 2-1 vic-tory in Iceland. But Anderlecht, the UEFA Cup holder, had no trouble in disposing of Brynne, 3-0, in Nor-

In another Cup Winners' Cup match, Diego Maradona, the world's most expensive player, had three goals as Barcelona crushed IFC Magdeburg, 5-I, in East Germany.

Elsewhere, Juventus, led by Dorona managed only a 1-0 home vic-tory over Red Star Belgrade, and Internazionale of Milan was beaten in Turkey, 1-0, by little-known Trabzouspor.

More Soviet Games Canceled in U.S. TUSCALOOSA, Alabama (Combined Dispatches) — Two more schools — Alabama and Houston — have canceled games on an American tour by the Soviet national basketball team, citing the Soviet downing of a South Korean passenger plane. Alabama officials announced Thursday that their Nov. 21 game with the Russians was being canceled to protest Moscow's "intransigence in responding to world concerns." In all, six of seven schools on the Soviet tour - all but Kansas - have canceled their games. In Detroit, officials canceled a match between the U.S. Olympic bockey team and the Soviet national team that was scheduled for Dec. 5.

But the chairman of the U.S. Olympic Hockey Committee, Walter Bush, said he was shocked by the decision, adding, "It's unfair to penalize us." New York Considers Domed Stadium

NEW YORK (NYT) - City officials said Wednesday that they were exploring the construction of a domed stadium in New York, mostly to persuade the Jets of the National Football League not to move to New Jersey when their lease at Shea Stadium expires after this season. There is no question but that one option we will be considering is whether or not to build a new, domed stadium," Mayor Edward I. Koch said. But city officials acknowledged that they had no specific site, no estimate of costs and no starting or completion date.

Zoeller Takes Lead in Las Vegas Golf LAS VEGAS (AP) — Fuzzy Zoeller, despite a chronic back ailment, had a 9-under-par 63 Wednesday to take a one-stroke lead after the first round of the Las Vegas Pro-Celebrity Classic golf tournament. The format calls for the 208 pros to play one round on each of four courses, each day with a different four-man team of amateurs. After 72 holes, the amateurs will drop out and the field will be cut to the 70 pros for the final round Sunday at the Las Vegas Country Club.

Mark Weibe, who has made six unsuccessful attempts to gain full playing rights at the pro tour's qualifying school, shot a 64 in the searing afternoon heat and was alone in second.

SOMEWHERE IN THE COTS-WOLDS, England — The En-glish are said to be a tacinum race, and our adventures in the dining rooms of country inns confirmed it. Wherever we stayed - the King's Arms, the Plowman's Legs, the Squire's Kidneys — silence in the dining room was intense. After a while you could detect faint whispering among the diners and guess that it was conversation. Dinner conversation, since food was being consumed. Now and then a stifled sob added to the mournful impressioo that we were intruding on the bereaved at a funeral wake, though it probably sig-nified only that the waiter had spilled hot soup in somebody's lap. To anyone fresh from the clamor and clang of medieval battle which is the sound of New York restaurants, these grieving silences were oot uopleasant. During our sixth night of silent dining I finally dared speak to my wife. "People here are so civilized," I whispered.

"What?" she whispered. "People here are terribly civilized," I whispered louder. Whereupon diners around the room turned to stare at the source of the uproar. There was no extra charge for raising your whisper in that particular inn — the Earl's Elbows - but the waiter came by to spill hot gravy in my lap and, getting his message clearly, I stifled my scream down to barely audible moan.

Immersed in a people with such self-control, I took no pains about cry out in a locd whisper: "Taciturchoosing my seat for a three-bour mity, make England expects every train trip from Yorkshire to Lon- man to do his taciturnity," but all I don some days later and sat beside dared sain was a stifled sob. a tiny gentleman who seemed likely

The Mysteries of Custer's Last Stand

Recent Grass Fire May Help to Solve Historical Puzzles

By James Robbins

New York Times Service C ROW AGENCY, Montain When Lieutenant Colonel George Amstrong Custer led the 7th Cavalry along, in banks of the Little Bighorn River, many in the reasons for his battlefield actions died with him and his 215 soldiers. These questions have puzzled historians and military analysts, professional and amateur, for 107 years. Now, a grass fire that blackened all 600 acres of the Custer Battlefield Natural Mon-ument on Aug. 10 is helping the National Park Service, which administrate the site, to unravel some of the mysteries of Caster's last

With the opening of the areas that had been overgrown with thicket, historians hope to find burial sites, spent shells and other objects that might shed light on the course of the abrupt defeat.

Historians are particularly interested in 28 soldiers from Company E who were killed as they rode from the battle site, down Deep Coulee to the tree-lined Little Bighorn.

Stone markers placed above Deep Coulee indicate that Company E fell roughly a hundred yards from the coules. Some records say, however, that the bodies were hastily buried in the coulee itself. Still other records say all human remains from the battle were removed to a mass grave oo a knoll overlooking the

There are questions that have nagged historians for years," said Neil Mangum, a Park Service historian based at the site. "Now is an advantageous time for us to start looking." Richard Fox, an archaeologist from the University of Calgary in Alberta, is helping draft the five-year plan. Standing in 100-degree heat on dusty, blackened ground dotted with marble tombstones, he pointed out Deep Coulee. He said some historians speculated that Company E, anticipating the impending massacre, attempted to escape to the river, several hundred yards away.

Others believe that Custer, realizing he was vastly outnumbered, sent Company E to protect his left flank as he retreated. In any case, Company E was cut off by pursuing Indians and, along with the rest of Custer's detachment, was wiped out.

When the fire struck, it revealed several mounds that Fox believes could be grave sites. He also pointed out indentations in the ravine walls where he speculated soldiers stood and pushed down dirt. "In a way the fire has really helped us," Fox said. "Deep Coulee was virtually impenetrable before the

The fire also revealed burnan bone frag-ments in one area, including part of a skull and jawbone, disproving the contention that all human remains were moved and lending credence to the theory that Company E is still buried in Deep Coulee. The mounds will be excavated over the next several years.

Mangum also hopes that barren ground will make it easier to find the spot where Indians and the cavalry stood in the battle. Using a metal detector, Mangum has found concentrations of cartridges in one spot. But while graves, cartridges and horseshoes have been found, the fire did not reveal a wealth of artifacts. Fox said most of those
